Her family legacy is at stake. Will the new man in town save it or destroy it?

As the fourth-generation editor of the Oak Hill Gazette, Abby Warner is determined to carry on the paper's proud tradition despite increasing financial problems. But big-city publishing heir Mark Campbell wants to take the paper away from her as fast as possible. In a situation rife with tension, sparks fly.

Yet when Mark finds a new purpose for his life in the podunk town he derided, and Abby begins to realize there's more to the playboy heir than she first thought, sparks of a different kind start to fly.

As major changes loom, can these two people from different backgrounds open their hearts to each other and find the courage to embrace the unexpected opportunities that have graced their lives?

In this small-town-America story, bestselling author Irene Hannon pens an inspiring tale about embracing change and finding silver linings.
