My heart thrusts with a force that takes me by surprise. Telling me something I don't understand. A splitting pain, a longing to slip back under. They tell me I was in a hit-and-run, but I can't remember what happened that night. All I know is that I woke up with pictures in my pocket, a card from one of those photo booths in the mall. And I'm in the pictures. Cody Rush, me, and Julianna.

Her brother was there that night, and my dad, the FBI agent, was the one who put her mom behind bars. What's the connection? And why won't Julianna talk to me now? Somehow, she holds the key to it all, and getting close—real close—to her for the answers I need will be no hardship at all.
