Synopsis

Join host Matt Skolnik in this episode of PC Reforming as he engages with Presbyterian leaders Kathy Nice and Lisa Allgood from Ohio in a thought-provoking discussion about self-imposed constraints within the church. They explore how historical traditions and practices can unintentionally limit the church's mission and propose bold visions for Reformation. Topics include the balance between structure and spiritual movement, the vital role of disciple-making, addressing the overemphasis on buildings and academics, and the passion of young church leaders. This engaging conversation aims to inspire the Presbyterian community to rethink and embrace a more dynamic and spiritually alive identity.
