What do you do when the love isn't enough anymore?

Five years. A husband and a set of twins. A new business. Calliope has achieved every goal on her vision board since leaving her job as a personal assistant to one of Seattle's prominent tech CEOs to marry him and have his babies. Now, with her eccentric twins turning six, it's time to focus more time and energy on her PR agency, Creative Connections. As she's establishing her name as the go-to for public relations on the West coast, the furthest thing from her mind is getting pregnant again, but her husband has his own plans.

Brandon Sims is used to two things: success and getting his way. His life as CEO of Payout, Inc, and husband to one of the baddest women in the world has taught him that there's nothing that he can't have or do. That's why Calliope's adamant refusal to even entertain the idea of more kids has him having thoughts that threaten to topple everything they've built together.

When their bond is tested, and misunderstandings put the relationship in danger, can they hit the reset button and remember what brought them together in the first place?
