Mary is longing for another chance at motherhood. Jonah can give his beautiful wife anything money can buy, except the thing she wants most. Will this weekend be magical? Following tragedy, Mary and Jonah take a romantic weekend getaway to revitalize their shell-shocked hormones. Their interlude is interrupted by rock music blaring from across the hall. Jonah leaves Mary in their suite to investigate and pick up a bottle of wine. While Mary settles in, waiting for her husband to return, she hears the door open and close. She feels a familiar touch run up the back of her legs as she leans on the window casing watching the holiday scene below. When she turns to face the owner of the exploring hands, she's shocked to see dark and unfamiliar eyes staring into hers. And the guitar tattoo on his chest confirms, this is not Jonah. Whose arms has she fallen into? Whose lips are enjoying every part of her body? During a magical night of love, Mary is spellbound. Reality doesn't exist.
