Synopsis

Preet Bharara served as the United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York, a storied office with a reputation for prosecuting some of the biggest and most interesting cases in the country. In that role, Preet led numerous high-profile financial fraud and public corruption investigations. A graduate of Harvard College and Columbia Law School, Preet also worked as an Assistant United States Attorney — a line prosecutor — in that same office.

His new book, Doing Justice, is a thoughtful and compelling reflection on his time in the Justice Department, the victims he helped, the agents and prosecutors with whom he worked, and the difficult judgment calls and dilemmas they tackled as they endeavored to do justice.

Today he's the host of "Stay Tuned with Preet," a weekly podcast featuring interviews with people from the world of law, politics, and journalism. On today's episode, we discuss the rule of law, public conceptions and misconceptions about criminal justice, fascinating cases, and the way that good agents and prosecutors strive to meet their obligations.
