Women have no ability to cast spells. That’s what wizards have said for generations - and it’s a lie.

In this second book of the Clandestine Magic trilogy, Beatrix Harper wants to expose the lie to protect her sister’s life. Her desperate plan: train tens of thousands of women in secret, then shock the nation with a display of their magic. She thinks it will work - if only she can keep the details from her town’s wizard, Peter Blackwell.

But that’s nearly impossible thanks to their unwanted magical connection. Peter, meanwhile, fears that his own desperate goal - to counter the terrible weapon he should never have invented - is doomed to fail.

Their plans are about to collide. Disastrously.

Content note: One scene in the book includes a character discussing a past trauma.
