Leaving the carnage of a senseless war behind her, Lucca has deserted her command. She races for home and safety, knowing that there are soldiers behind her. If her pursuers catch her, they will execute her. The final leg of her journey takes her through a goblin-infested forest. The sounds of a battle pull her away from her path - seeing a centaur fighting off a goblin horde, Lucca leaps into the fray. The centaur, Elatus, is also a warrior, but he has left his home and his people because of their ritualized, never-ending warfare. As the shield-companions travel together, danger and adrenaline set off a firestorm of arousal - can Lucca accept Elatus's otherness? Or will their pursuers catch them before she can?
