I should have died. Sometimes I wish I did. At least then I wouldn't be alone.

After my parents' divorce, my mom moved on with her yoga-teaching boyfriend and my dad threw himself into work, leaving me to figure out how to navigate my new reality on my own. Transitioning from an all-girls school in Malibu to the elite Arlington Park Academy in the suburbs of Chicago means more changes than I can handle. I feel like I'm drowning, losing myself, craving the sense of belonging I lost.

Then the overly enthusiastic class president and my next-door neighbor, Emily, claims me as her new best friend. She takes me to a party where I meet a group of guys that make me feel like I found my home.

Luca, the one who saves me. Skyler, the one who makes me laugh. Noah, the one who challenges me. Vince, that one who understands me. And Gavin, the one who includes me.

Too bad Emily and her friends don't exactly get along with the guys. How can I balance both groups? I can't risk losing anyone else. Especially when the guys say they know the reason I survived the accident that killed her brother and best friend.
