Sasha Torrence has left the Arizona sun, and her boyfriend, to visit her father in Portland, Oregon. She isn't happy about the arrangement, but since Dad's paying her college tuition, she can't exactly say no. Turns out, to spend the summer in the cooler Northwest, Sasha will have to get a job. That's where The Coffee Break comes in-a neat little caf  with a super-hot manger. However, The Coffee Break ends up being too good (and weird) to be true. Her new friends make her take herself less seriously, the outrageous customers show her there's more to life than being perfect, and Taten--that super-hot manager--is exactly the sort of guy Sasha could fall in love with. But summers don't last forever, and it's almost time for Sasha to go home for college. Add in the sudden return of Taten's long-lost ex, a father with too-high expectations, and a heartbreaking moment in an Olive Garden, and this a major Coffee Break-Up.
