A book about what humans have done to the world and what we have done to ourselves. Specifically, it is a book about "Man's best friends" their origin-myths, and their place in the world before they were coopted into human society and ideas of pure breeding and dysgenics. The Dogs also imagines a future where dogs develop the power of speech; led by the non-violent UnderDogs and the more radical Der Uberhund, the animals of the world begin demanding their rights.
