All the light went out of Jake's life when his older brother Caleb died in a traffic accident. Getting through the aftermath was always going to be the hardest thing he'd ever done, but finding out that the tall stranger at the graveside was the one driving the car? At least Jake now has a target for all the rage inside him. Because the man responsible for stealing Caleb's light from the world has no right to intrude on their grief.

Liam had known deep down that it was a mistake to go to Tennessee, but he'd hoped saying good-bye to Caleb would ease the pain inside him. The hostile reception from Caleb's family and friends comes as no surprise, and Liam flees before things get ugly. They obviously know nothing of Caleb's life in Atlanta, and maybe it's better that way. Caleb's secrets can die with him.

When Jake turns up at Caleb's apartment to collect his brother's possessions, what he discovers is the first shock in what is to be a series of revelations, turning Jake's world upside down. New knowledge brings fresh pain and anguish.

Jake isn't the only one who's hurting....
